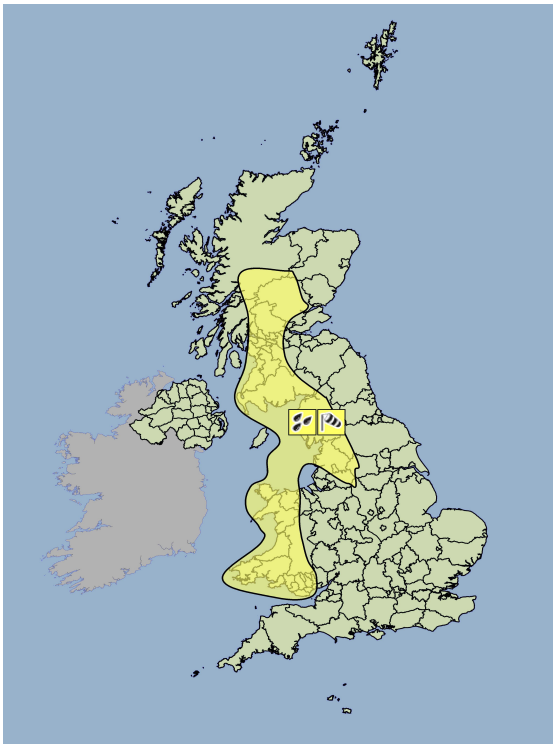
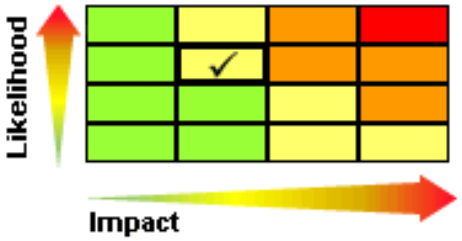
National Severe Weather Warning Service





CANCELLED

Chief Forecasters Assessment
Spells of heavy rain are likely to reach western Britain later on Saturday and may become persistent over high ground by the early hours of Sunday, clearing southeastwards later on Sunday. Some 15-25 mm of rain is likely in places, particularly high ground where locally 50 mm is likely, perhaps with as much as 80 mm falling over mountains of Scotland and Cumbria.

Strong winds are likely at times, with gusts of 40-50 mph in places, particularly coasts and high ground where 60 mph gusts are possible.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain and Wind

Valid from 00:05 on Sun, 01st Oct 2017 until 18:00 on Sun, 01st Oct 2017

This warning has been canceled. Whilst it is still expected to be wet and windy in places tomorrow, impacts are now expected to be minimal.

Spells of heavy and persistent rain are expected over some areas of western and northern Britain accompanied by strong winds at times.

Flooding of a few homes and businesses is possible. Spray and flooding on roads could make journey times longer and could affect some bus and train services.

In addition, strong winds may be an additional hazard at times, perhaps with falling trees causing some interruptions to power supplies.

This warning has been updated and is now a dual warning for rain and wind. The area has now changed to remove southwest England from the warning but to extend it across more of Scotland. The impact assessment has been reduced to low.
